Hello, Be Bug Free Customers!

As we dive into December, the chill in the air brings more than just festive cheer—it also drives many pests indoors in search of warmth. This month, we want to highlight some common winter intruders and share some important tips to keep your home pest-free!

Watch Out for Ants and Roaches!

With temperatures dropping, ants and roaches may seek refuge inside your home. These pests can quickly become a nuisance, so it's essential to stay vigilant. Here are a few signs to look for:

- Ant Trails: Look for small trails along walls and floors, especially in kitchens.
- Roach Droppings: These are small, dark specks often found in corners or near food sources.

Firewood Safety

If you're stocking up on firewood for those cozy winter nights, be cautious about where you place it. Insects like roaches, beetles, spiders, scorpions, carpenter ants, and acrobatic ants can hide in and around wood piles. Always store firewood at least 20 feet away from your home to prevent these pests from finding their way inside.

Mice and Rats

As winter sets in, mice and rats will be on the hunt for shelter. These rodents can squeeze through tiny openings and may find their way into your attic, walls, or basement. Be proactive:

- Keep food stored in airtight containers.
- Regularly check for signs of rodent activity, like droppings or gnaw marks.
